American Psychiatric Foundation sponsors national distribution of WLIW21’s award-winning mental health series “Healthy Minds”

Premieres nationwide on public television October 2009 (check local listings) in honor of Mental Illness Awareness Week and World Mental Health Day

According to the U.S. Surgeon General, one in five people has a diagnosable mental disorder. For many families, the fear and shame associated with a diagnosis of mental illness can lead to isolation and suffering in silence. Healthy Minds, produced by WLIW21 in association with WNET.ORG, aims to remove the stigma that can prevent patients and their families from seeking help. Recognizing the critical need to support a high-quality educational series on a myriad of mental health topics, the American Psychiatric Foundation, the philanthropic arm of the American Psychiatric Association, is partnering with WLIW21 to bring Healthy Minds to national public television audiences. The series premieres nationwide October 2009 on public television (check local listings) in honor of Mental Illness Awareness Week (10/4-10) and World Mental Health Day (10/10).

Each half-hour in the 16-episode series humanizes a specific mental health condition through inspiring personal stories and interviews with leading researchers and experts, who provide the latest information about diagnosis and treatment. Healthy Minds covers a wide range of topics, including autism, depression, chemical dependency, post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), eating disorders, and bipolar disorder, to bring viewers a better understanding of disorders that can affect anyone, at any age. Interviews with families living with – and overcoming – mental illness offer relatable perspectives on mental health conditions that are often misunderstood. Three special episodes further demonstrate the universal impact of mental illness through celebrity interviews: news veteran Mike Wallace reveals his battle with depression, and actor Patty Duke and broadcast journalist Jane Pauley talk about their experiences living with bipolar disorder. Full episode streams and resources for every topic covered are available on the series’ website: wliw.org/healthyminds.

Healthy Minds provides expertise from Eric Kandel, M.D., winner of the 2000 Nobel Prize in Physiology or Medicine, and leading researchers affiliated with prestigious mental health institutions, including the National Institute of Mental Health, Columbia University Medical Center, the New York State Psychiatric Institute, --MORE-- the Hazelden Foundation, and Cold Spring Harbor Laboratory. The series is hosted by Dr. Jeffrey Borenstein, CEO and medical director of Holliswood Hospital (Queens, N.Y.) and chair of the section on psychiatry at the New York Academy of Medicine, who makes medical jargon and brain concepts at the forefront of modern medicine, like neurogenesis and neuroplasticity, easy to understand. Healthy Minds also explores proactive steps viewers can take towards their own mental wellness and the benefits of early intervention for a variety of disorders.

As Dr. Borenstein explains, “Everyone is touched by psychiatric conditions, either themselves or a loved one. Our goal is to share cutting-edge information from experts along with personal experiences from people who have overcome psychiatric conditions. Now, more than ever, it is important to reduce stigma and encourage people who have a psychiatric condition not to suffer in silence but to seek help. I want people to know that with help, there is hope.”

“The American Psychiatric Foundation recognized the quality of the Healthy Minds series and the growing public television audience interest in mental health,” said Richard Harding, M.D., American Psychiatric Foundation president. “We believe the collaboration between our foundation and WLIW21 to bring Healthy Minds to a national audience will help communicate mental health topics, messages and information in a new and effective way.”

Since the series' premiere in the New York metropolitan area, Healthy Minds has earned numerous awards, including five Tellys honoring the best in local television.
