The extraordinary octopus has provided the inspiration for science fiction’s most provocative and mysterious extraterrestrials. Researchers are now discovering the extent to which these highly intelligent animals are individual personalities, able to recognize faces and interact with others — a surprising adaptation for an animal once thought to live an asocial existence.

Join Nature for a deep dive into this fascinating new science in Octopus: Making Contact (Thursday, October 3 at 8pm). The film, which kicks off Nature’s 38th season, follows Dr. David Scheel, a professor of marine biology at Alaska Pacific University in Anchorage, as he raises and studies a day octopus named Heidi in a tank in his home with assistance from his teenage daughter Laurel.

“Octopuses followed a different evolutionary path, making them different from all other intelligent animals on this planet,” Scheel says in the film. “I am less intrigued by the differences and more interested in our similarities. It’s been a privilege to have a relationship with such a strange and wonderful creature.”

Also this month on Nature, travel back in time with a pioneering group of scientists whose discoveries transform our understanding of how nature works in The Serengeti Rules (Thursday, October 10 at 8pm). Based on a book of the same name, the award-winning film introduces five scientists who study the “keystone” species — from sea otters and wolves to the humble wildebeest — that keep entire ecosystems in balance. Now in the twilight of their eminent careers, these unsung heroes of modern ecology share stories of their adventures and offer new hope for restoring our world.

Next, go undercover with a film crew on a perilous journey to the untouched wilderness in the Amazon rainforest in Undercover in the Jungle (Thursday, October 17 at 8pm). The Okavango Delta is an unlikely oasis and lush paradise in the middle of a hostile desert in Southern Africa that connects and supports a wide array of creatures. Experience the wildlife of this unique ecosystem in Okavango: River of Dreams (Thursdays, October 24 - November 7 at 8pm), a three-part miniseries by award-winning filmmakers Dereck and Beverly Joubert (Nature: Soul of the Elephant), who have lived in the Okavango for 35 years.

JOURNEY TO JOBS

Journey to Jobs is a story of how communities are providing support, advice, and intervention services to youth, veterans and adults in career transition. Hear directly from job seekers and the newly employed, business and nonprofit leaders, as well as program staff, volunteers and mentors as they work to create pathways to high-demand skilled careers.

Join PBS NewsHour’s Hari Sreenivasan on this cross-country journey, from a bakery in Syracuse that supports individuals with mental health issues, to Detroit, where an electrician shares her expertise with public high school students and encourages young women and people of color to enter the construction trades.

As ambitious innovators race to develop autonomous vehicles, some experts warn there are still daunting challenges ahead, including how to train artificial intelligence to be better than humans at making life-and-death decisions. How do self-driving cars work? How close are we to large-scale deployment of them? And will we ever be able to trust AI with our lives?
